The 1967 book was ahead of its time in the way it was produced—empirically and collaboratively. Today we'd call it crowd-sourcing. Sunset magazine's garden editor Joe Williamson, who headed the book's development (and also was deeply involved with Pacific Horticulture in its early days), hired me to help out with the book's climate section. He said he hired me because I knew what UC soil mix was—an esoteric bit of knowledge among English majors and the only thing I had learned ...
